The Problem

Politicians discuss societal issues in parliamentary debates to impose better laws. To engage more peoples, some government, e.g UK, Canada and Germany publish the debates' transcription online. Nevertheless, these debates and relating issues are often not studied sufficiently. Therefore it restricts the public's level of accessibility.

The Solution

We would like to extract issues and arguments in these debates and bring them closer to people by going through 2 steps:

- First, examine the speeches made by politicians, concerning their stance and essential arguments.
- Second, integrate the results into the argument search engine args.me to present to users in a clear and simple manner.
